Alexandria Gazette.

FRIDAY UNING. MAY 26, 1893.

Nor a Ghost.-The "great excitement" in the vicinity of Glade Spring, Tenn., over the oak tree that told weird tales about buried treasures and murdered peddlers, et cetera, has subsided, and the credulous hayseeders can go on planting corn in peace; and the engineers on the Norfolk and Western who hurried by the gruesome spot with wide open throttles and ba(i)ted breath, may resume their normal speed. The "ghost" has vanished; skipped; ske-daddled; vamoosed; evasit, erupit, et cetera, et cetera. Æolus (see dictionary) showed the ancient Greeks how to make a harp by stretching a horse-hair in a position for the wind to blow across it; and once in a while the old fellow tries his band by fixing up a splinter on a house-top or a tree, and blowing his breath against it. This is what the mysterious "talking tree" at Glade Spring turns out to be. We learn that an investigation discloses the fact that two small branches cross each other in such a way that when the wind blows one of them does the part of the fiddle. and the other that of the bow-and there you are.

We are authorized to state that the rumor that ex-Governor Bob Taylor is negotiating for the tree to send it along with his advance agent as an advertisement of his lecture, is premature; he may, however, carry it with him to use as an object lesson.—Bristol News.
